Your Comments: For far too long the Willamette River has been used as a convenient tool by industries that failed to provide proper maintenance of this irreplaceable tool. Whether the damage done was by choice or ignorance matters naught. It is now the responsibility of those industries to accept the liability of repairing the damage. And as proposed, with so much as stake for wildlife, human health, and the welfare of river environments in the future, a halfway fix is not acceptable. In this case, better is not better. All steps must be taken to return the Willamette River Superfund Site to as close to its original state as possible, as quickly as possible.
